Dear Sir

Receive this to supply an omission in my last: and also as the conveyance of certain after thoughts. First let me perform the first by thanking you for the beautiful plates of shipping: They were to come in at Chatham: but they may come in as well at Portsmouth where I suppose great ships are built.[2] I am got as far as the confines of Hampshire but hope to get the new map this month & then proceed.[3] my secretary can have time to copy this for you. To facilitate my work Pray tell me are the vast woods I saw from Port down; royal. is there much & sizeable timber. what is that forest called?[4]

As to title pages to London had you not best use the printed one for y^{r} first part. & tell what other divisions you make & moses may make suitable Title pages: with a little drawing to each. ~~[illegible]~~ express the pages that each of y^{r} divisions begin at, that a proper drawing be selected.

I shall not trouble you more about Foreign heads: but send Mazel or some friend to Richardson who honestly marks the price of each print on its back. what I want them for chiefly, is Africa & Spain,

Be so good as to trouble yourself with sending the annexed to Faulder for a L.P. supplem^{t}. to the London.

Adieu
Y^{rs} most truely

Th. Pennant.
Downing Feb^{r}. 6th - 91.[5]

The suite of the Dover journey will be from thence to the extremity of Hampshire. This this be begun for you next week if you do not contradict. for I shall be on a visit for five days, & nothing for him to do.

Stamp: (handstamp) HOLYWELL

Stamp: (postmark) F[illegible]

Editorial Notes

[1] Pennant refers to the location of the prints of ships to be included in his extra-illustrated manuscript journey 'from the Temple stairs to the lands end'. Chatham is featured in From London to Dover (1801), esp. pp. 74–5; Portsmouth in From Dover to the Isle of Wight (1801), esp. p. 123.

[2] Pennant was seeking a map of Hampshire produced by William Faden.

[3] See 1120.

[4] The year [17]91 may be a later addition in Richard Bull's hand.
